Library Renovation Update

By Ellen Robbins

This year we are observing the 80th anniversary of the City Library – not only with cake and special birthday cards – but with steps toward what we hope will be a significant renovation, which will also give us additional space.

A new concept design was presented to the City Council on Oct. 29, which incorporated their own recommendations, as well as those of Library and other City staff.

Architect Greg Lukmire presented this concept design at public meetings on Dec. 12 and Jan. 7 – eliciting some spirited discussion and suggestions for the next phase, which involves schematic design and detailed design development.

Approximately 25 people of varying ages attended both meetings. A group of about five elementary age kids attended the Dec. 16 meeting. Here are some of the topics that came up at both meetings.

Light was a big concern. Though people were not opposed to the larger windows shown in the character sketches, which allow more natural light to enter the Library, there were concerns that the effect remain substantially different from the new Silver Spring Library, which was described as having “an excess of glass,” making it “blinding” and “too open.” One person asked, “Could an excess of light damage library materials?” Would it be distracting or too bright? The architect discussed the attributes of the newer glass, which is thermally broken, with two or even three panes, allowing for considerable specificity. One person commented there might be insufficient light in the central part of the library, away from the windows. Might a skylight be an option?

Adequate space for different functions came up repeatedly – as this has been a continuing concern. Will there be enough space for books, periodicals, comfortable seating, quiet space, and storage space as well as enough work space for staff? Will the program room be...

Community Conversations

You are invited to join the City Council for a Community Conversation on Affordable Housing on Saturday, Feb. 6 from 9:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m.

The meeting, the first in a series of Community Conversations on various topics, will provide an opportunity to learn and engage in a discussion about the City’s approach to housing, current trends at the local and state level and some new ideas for addressing the issue of affordable housing in Takoma Park.

In addition to City Council, subject matter experts from City staff and national and community organizations will be present to share information, respond to questions and participate in the conversation. The meeting will take place at the Takoma Park Community Center/Sam Abbot Citizens’ Center located at 7500 Maple Ave.

Beer and wine sales increase local choices

By Kevin Adler

Looking for something to do on a Thursday evening? Maybe it’s time to check out the Co-op’s weekly wine tastings.

Wine tastings at the Co-op? You read that right. In December, the TPSS Co-op, located at 201 Ethan Allen Ave., began to test a series of tastings after a fall rollout of its new beer and wine section.

The Co-op and PhotoPressArt have been the first two businesses in the city to take advantage of a change in city and state law to allow takeout beer and wine to take advantage of a change in city and state law to allow takeout beer and wine.

These new options have been rapidly embraced. “People come in, and they pick up a bottle or two, they’re excited. Boomers, Millennials, they like having wine with dinner,” said Greg Czech, who runs the alcohol operation for the Co-op.

For the 200 or more selections available at any given time, Czech focuses on...

Correct on cannabis

I just saw the medical cannabis article in the January issue. Besides writing an easily read article, Bob Guldin did an excellent job of presenting the facts. [This is the first article I've read on medical cannabis that didn't get something major wrong. By the way, I always enjoy the newsletter and learn from it.

—Rabbi Jeffrey Kahn, Takoma Wellness Center, Washington DC

Hospital’s move a long time coming

I have watched with interest and bemusement over the last 15 years the consequences of Takoma Park’s vaunted politics of obstruction in regard to Washington Adventist Hospital. Beginning in 2000-2001 when the WAH sought to expand onsite in Takoma Park and culminating in 2005 when the hospital board voted to leave Takoma Park, the City and the community organizations in the city were vocal, hostile and sometimes nasty opponents of the business needs of the hospital. As soon as the Hospital announced in 2005 its intent to leave, these same people began expressing shock and dismay.

—Elliot Rosen, Takoma Park

Primary care vs. urgent care

In your recent article “Maryland Health Care Commission Approves Hospital’s Move,” you state that the establishment of a 24/7 urgent care center will “ensure that there will be no gap in proving the primary care services the community needs.”

Primary care services and urgent care services are extremely different. Primary care provides on going medical care, including prevention (such as immunizations and checkups) and management of primary care diseases (such as diabetes and hypertension). Urgent Care does not provide the broad spectrum of prevention and care coordination that primary care offers, but rather is there for urgent needs—sutures, a virus or a minor infection.

The two services can be complimentary, but at their essence, are very different. You would not say a 24/7 gas station and convenience store offers full-scope grocery shopping. In that same light, a 24/7 urgent care does not offer full-scope primary care.

—Lois Wessel, Family Nurse Practitioner, Takoma Park

LIBRARY RENOVATION

large enough? Greg Lukmire addressed all these concerns. Several group study spaces are enclosed (with exterior glass) and can be used as collaborative or quiet study space. The program room is intended as a flexible, multi-purpose space with very lightweight modular tables and chairs that can be easily moved. There will be comfortable seating and designated space for periodicals and other collections. A petition was submitted, signed by 14 kids, asking for a “read-aloud section” in the children’s room.

Space outside the library, which was not part of the design process, also generated a lot of comments. People wanted to know how the flood wall and the area around the flag pole might be dealt with. Though there was general agreement that it is cumbersome to leap over the wall or walk around it, several people also voiced concern that there be a gathering place somewhere on the grounds— for kids, care-givers, and parents picking up kids. A wish for personal bike-space was also expressed as a way to preserve the attractive bike racks now in front of the library. One person voiced concern about the flat roof and the load it carries in winter; another suggested that the mosaic might be allowed to expand toward Maple Ave. However, the transformer and the police parking area would seriously limit that expansion. There was a general wish for a future design for the outdoor space that included seating and other attractive components.

The planned new entrance facing the parking lot was viewed favorably, but there was insistence on a walkway from Philadelphia Ave. up to the new Community Center Entrance. There was an associated concern about some loss of parking spaces, which are already at a premium. The architect mentioned the possibility of narrowing the spaces alongside of the buildings, which are unusually wide. Other suggestions for the interior were also expressed as a way to preserve the attractive bike racks now in front of the library.

BEER AND WINE

wines for $20 or less, and he has scoured the “best of” lists and wine ratings guides. “I come from a family in the restaurant and liquor store business,” he said. “I like doing the research, and I try to find selections that might not be at other stores in the county.”

Reflecting his audience, Czech stocks organic wines, as well as wines made from sustainably grown grapes. For beer, Czech goes local and regional, taking advantage of a strong craft-brewing scene in the Metro DC area with choices from DC Brau, Heavy Seas (Baltimore) and Bold Rock Hard Cider (Nellysford, Va.). “Craft beers are very popular, and they’ve been a good business for us,” Czech said.

According to him sales have far exceeded expectations, and he’s had to put in unexpected hours to keep up with demand. “Some wines that I thought we’d sell two or three bottles in a week have been selling at two or three cases per week. We’ve had to build extra storage facilities. That’s a nice problem to have,” he said.

—Jonathan Schilder
Fences and retaining walls

Robert Frost once wrote a poem questioning if good fences make good neighbors. Whether or not this is true is up for debate, but having your fence or retaining wall in good condition will certainly keep neighbors happy and the neighborhood looking good. The City requires that fences should not be missing slats or falling, and wooden fences should not have any rotten wood.

If there is a chain link fence, all posts or rails should be attached at connections, and mesh should be attached to posts and rails or they can be dangerous to pedestrians. If the fence or retaining wall is painted, the paint should not be peeling. Retaining walls and fences should also be free of vines or other overgrowth as they can damage walls and fences.

Overgrowth on fences and walls can also grow onto the sidewalk and hinder pedestrians. No tarps should be hung on walls or fences. Lastly, retaining walls should not be falling into yards or onto sidewalks.

If you decide to build a fence or a retaining wall, be aware that a building permit is required. Contact the City Planning Division to obtain a permit letter and then Montgomery County to obtain the permit itself. If your property is within a designated historic area, you will also need a Historic Area Work Permit.

When building, be sure the fence or retaining wall is within the property lines. If the structure is near an intersection, check that it does not impede the sight line of drivers trying to cross or turn. If you have any questions about the process, you can contact the Housing and Community Development office at 301-891-7119.

The Takoma Park City Council has an opportunity to comment on these projects based on approved City policies and plans and input from citizens. Recent development review updates in Takoma Park include:

- Site Plan # 820150150 was approved by the Montgomery County Planning Board on Jan. 7 to construct a single-story commercial building for a quick service restaurant with a drive thru at New Hampshire Ave. and Holton Lane.
- Preliminary Plan #120160170 was submitted for review to subdivide three existing lots into five new lots at 430-434 Ethan Allen Ave.

Afro House presents
Scott Patterson
Saturday, Feb. 6, 7:30 p.m.
The Takoma Park Community Center Auditorium
7500 Maple Avenue

Scott Patterson’s influences are more of a grab-bag than a plastic Halloween jack-o’-lantern. The pianist and artist director of Afro House in Baltimore cites Chopin, Bob Marley and David Lynch’s “Dune,” as sources of inspiration for his sci-fi, piano rock opera Ebon-Kojo: The Last Tribe.

“I’m really into science fiction and space, and after a while, I realized my songs had a similar theme and that it was time to put them into a narrative,” he said.

Patterson will bring an excerpted version of his Ebon Kojo song cycle to the Takoma Park Community Center on Feb. 6 at 7:30 p.m.

“The story ended up being about a general who gets sent on a suicide mission to create an atmosphere and bring life to a planet with help from an android, which he finds out is his son,” Patterson said.

“He has this moral dilemma where he has to go through with the mission and save earth or save his son.”

Patterson is used to defying audience expectations with Afro House, a performing arts collective that bears the slogan: “Disruptive Music Culture.”

“The story ended up being about a general who gets sent on a suicide mission to create an atmosphere and bring life to a planet with help from an android, which he finds out is his son,” Patterson said.

“I’m a musician and composer, and there are definitely conventions that one would expect to hear from a pianist and composer,” he said, “but I ignore all those conventions.”

“Once when we were doing [Ebon Kojo], and I’m calling the name of another character, who shares my son’s name,” he said. “My son thinks I’m calling him, and he’s in the audience calling out an answer.”

After performing at the Round House Theatre in Silver Spring, Patterson knew that his rock opera would appeal to Takoma Park residents. His themes and muses, however, are universal.

“Becoming a father was a big part of this,” Patterson said. “My kids are one of my greatest inspirations.”

There is a new fitness class that will help you with your New Year’s resolution. It’s called Go-Go Fitness. Provided by Go-Go Fitness LLC, this class is a comprehensive 60-minute, high cardio dance fitness workout that incorporates various dance styles and toning moves as well as the classic call and response of a live Go-Go music workout set.

Go-Go Fitness was the creation of Danette Tucker (a.k.a. Dani) in February 2012. Her reason for starting this class was to give families the opportunity to work out together. She wanted to create the same “Family Affair” that was the vision of the legendary Chuck Brown. Dani says, “Our classes are one hour long and provide a great cardio workout with several toning moves incorporated throughout each routine.”

Go-Go Fitness has 15 instructors and is offered at various recreation/community centers throughout the Washington Metropolitan area. It is now offered at our own Takoma Park Recreation Center on Saturdays at 12:00 noon.

Go-Go Fitness was just featured at the NBC4 Fitness Expo at the Washington Convention Center last month. It was the absolute hit of the event with more 200 people participating in the demonstration.

My Caldecott Committee experience
By Karen MacPherson

The hundreds of librarians packed into the Boston Convention Center room on the morning of Jan. 11 erupted in cheers as the program emcee said: “And the winner of the 2016 Randolph Caldecott Medal for most distinguished American picture book for children is Sophie Blackall for Finding Winnie: The True Story of the World’s Most Famous Bear.”

As the crowd cheered, my fellow 2016 Caldecott Committee members and I turned to each other with huge smiles. We had done it! After a year of reading, and re-reading (and re-reading…), hundreds of eligible books, and after two days of intense and deeply meaningful discussions, our work was completed and was now being feted by our librarian colleagues.

Throughout the process of choosing the 2016 Caldecott Medal winner, we had been humbled and awed by the fact that we were charged with choosing a book that would be purchased by hundreds of libraries and thousands of parents. We knew that the winning illustrator would garner both fame and fortune, as books chosen for the Caldecott Medal virtually never go out of print. There’s a good reason why the Caldecott Medal and the Newbery Medal, given annually to the best-written American book for children, are often called “the Oscars of the children’s book world.”

My involvement with the Caldecott process actually began in 2013 when I was asked to run for the 2016 Caldecott Committee. There are 15 members of the committee, seven are elected and eight, including the chairperson, are appointed by the leaders of the Association for Library Service to Children (ALSC), a division of the American Library Association.

The elections were held in the spring of 2014, and I won a spot on the committee. However, it wasn’t until January 2015 that our real work began. Over the course of 2015, each committee member received hundreds of books from publishers. Contrary to popular understanding of the Caldecott Medal as an award for picture books written for preschoolers, books for children ages birth through 14 are eligible. That wide age range meant we received books, illustrated nonfiction books, graphic novels and yes picture books for both young children and elementary-age kids.

Our job was to evaluate these books according to the Caldecott Medal criteria. Each month, we sent our chairperson, Rachel Payne of the Brooklyn Public Library, a list of suggested books, ones that we found interesting and thought our colleagues should read. Then, in October things got really serious. Each committee member has seven nominations – three made in October and two each in November and December. With so many great books published in 2015, it was excruciating for us to narrow our choices, but we had to. The nominated books then became our “finalists,” the only ones we could discuss when we gathered in Boston to choose our winner. All other books were off the table.

At this point, I need to mention the issue of confidentiality. All of our monthly suggestions, all of our nominated books, including how many books were nominated since people could end up nominating the same book, and all of our discussions in Boston will forever remain secret. Even our discussion room was designated as “secured,” meaning only committee members could enter.

In addition, we never discussed the nominated books, even in email or on the phone, until our deliberations began at 8 a.m. on Friday, Jan. 8. As you can imagine, we were all quite eager to finally discuss books that had consumed so many of our waking hours for an entire year.

Now the entire world knows our choices. In addition to awarding the 2016 Caldecott Medal to Blackall for Finding Winnie, our committee chose four Caldecott Honor books. They are (in order by illustrator’s last name): Trombone Shorty, illustrated by Bryan Collier and written by Troy “Trombone Shorty” Andrews; Waiting, written and illustrated by Kevin Henkes, Voice of Freedom: Fannie Lou Hamer, Spirit of the Civil Rights Movement, illustrated by Ekua Holmes and written by Carole Boston Weatherford; and Last Stop on Market Street, illustrated by Christian Robinson and written by Matt de la Pena.

In terms of Caldecott history, the 2016 Caldecott Medal was the 98th won by a woman (Some women have won multiple times.) since the award was first given in 1938. 50 medals have been won by men. Also, our group of Caldecott Honor books is amazingly diverse, our Honor illustrators include three African-American artists (Collier, Holmes and Robinson), a debut illustrator (Holmes) and a Caldecott Medalist (Henkes, who won the medal in 2005 for Kitten’s First Full Moon).

In a bonus for us, most of the books received awards from other awards committees, underscoring their excellence. Perhaps the biggest and best surprise was the fact that our Caldecott Honor book, Last Stop on Market Street, also was awarded the 2016 Newbery Medal for the lyrical and poignant text by author Matt de la Pena. It is only the second time that a picture book has won the Newbery Medal. While our committee’s official work is done, we now are charged with promoting our winners, using them in programs and talking them up with kids, parents and teachers. Meanwhile, our committee will gather one last time at the American Library Association’s conference in June to hear the acceptance speeches by the winners. And, finally, we’ll always have our committee t-shirt (created in homage to a beloved Boston-based, 1942 Caldecott Medal winning book): “Make Way for Caldecott 2016”
Rhizome: Community as curriculum

By Rick Henry

Put together a group of people with a dizzying array of eclectic interests and a “maker’s” mentality and dynamic outcomes are almost sure to occur.

For a group of six Takoma Park residents, that outcome emerged after the group, which is composed of, among other interests and occupations, a scientist, a musician, a poet and an urban farmer, collectively asked themselves the question, “What is something you would like to do if you had the space?”

“We had been talking about putting something together (around that question) for years,” said Steve Korn, one of the “group of six.” In September of 2014, we finally decided to officially start working on something.”

That something is Rhizome DC, a non-profit community space in Takoma Park billed “as a hub for experimentation, community collaboration, and social engagement” that was one of the organizations chosen to receive a 2016 community grant ($11,250) from the City of Takoma Park.

More specifically, Rhizome DC, which has just set up a permanent space at 6950 Maple Ave. that will open on March 1, offers users and community education opportunities - workshops, classes, demonstrations and exhibitions - that would likely not be offered anywhere else.

“We want to be a home for experimentation and risk taking in programming,” says Korn, who currently serves as president of the Rhizome Board, said. “We are not looking for things that are already offered.”

A list of the offerings that Rhizome has already sponsored illustrates Korn’s point. A “Teen Hackerspace” event taught attendees how to build circuits that control robots or make music, while participants in “Make Your Own Synthesizer” workshop learned how to assemble their own customizable music synthesizer.

Anyone from the community who has unique expertise or knowledge is welcomed and encouraged to teach a class or lead a workshop. “The community is the curriculum, and Takoma Park is a great community for it because it has such a wide cross-section of people from different backgrounds to partner and work with,” Korn said.

One such member of that community is Dr. Nadia Marsh. Marsh, who has an internal medicine practice in Takoma Park, wanted to share and apply her specialization in integrative medicine to a topic that resonated for people in the community. She settled on a workshop entitled “Insomnia: An Integrative Medical Approach.”

“It was great fun,” Marsh said of the workshop she delivered last November. “When you are focusing about health issues in an open, interactive forum, people learn more.”

Beyond the educational piece, Marsh stressed the importance of bringing a new approach to view many people are facing. “The participants appreciated the opportunity to express and share what they were going through.”

That sense of sharing, learning and experimenting is ultimately what is at the heart of Rhizome, Korn said. And now that the organization will have a permanent space, those affiliated with it are anxious to expand their reach and their offerings.

“The community grant was really helpful in getting us off the ground,” Korn said. “Now we want to get the word out that there is a space in Takoma Park where interesting things are happening and get as many people as we can to participate and put on programming.”

Have a unique or interesting skill, hobby or expertise that you would like to share with or teach to others? Contact Rhizome at info@rhizomedc.org.

What would you do?

By the Takoma Park Emergency Preparedness Committee

How might our Takoma Park elected officials help us in case of natural disasters or situations such as severe power outages, gas spills, and so on? We are asking City Council Members to discuss their leadership role in the event of crisis situations. We begin with Mayor Kate Stewart:

Q: Given our history of severe storms, tornadoes, hurricane damage, power outages and occasional gas leaks, what are the varied ways you would communicate a message to the residents of Takoma Park? What would the message be?

A: Mayor Kate Stewart: In any emergency situation, it is important to have a plan and to communicate accurate information to residents as quickly as possible. We are very lucky in Takoma Park to have an active residents’ Emergency Preparedness Committee and an emergency manager on staff. As a member of the City Council, I have been through emergency preparedness training, and I am familiar with the City’s emergency plans. The Mayor’s role in any emergency situation is to serve as the chief spokesperson for the City, confer with the City Manager, Police Chief and other department heads regarding the City’s response to the emergency and to coordinate with state, county, regional and federal elected officials. We have varied means for communicating with residents during an emergency situation, including the Emergency Alert System, reverse 911 calls, local news media, the Takoma Alert system, the City website, the cable TV emergency message system and loudspeakers.

Snow Angels needed now more than ever!

The Snow Angels Program is currently at capacity. We are reassessing our number of volunteers versus the 20 new requests for snow removal assistance that we received between Jan. 18-21. If we get additional volunteers, we may be able to gradually open the list to include those who have already contacted us. We are not receiving any new requests for the winter season.

The Lifelong Takoma Program is a part-time program. It responds to a large number and variety of resident requests, including requests for snow removal assistance. The program manager is unable to respond to resident requests outside of the program’s office hours (Tuesday through Thursday, 9 a.m. - 4 p.m., except on holidays) or when the City of Takoma Park government offices are closed. Volunteers and residents can contact Karen at lifelong@takomaparkmd.gov or 301-891-7232.

There’s a My TkPk app for that

The City of Takoma Park just released a new app that lets residents notify staff of service requests from their mobile devices. Whether it is a pothole or a tenant requesting help for an issue with a rental apartment, residents can contact staff in just a few easy clicks.

The new service, branded My TkPk, has existed on the City’s website since 2009 and can be found under City Contacts. It responds to a large number and variety of resident requests, including requests for snow removal assistance. The program manager is unable to respond to resident requests outside of the program’s office hours (Tuesday through Thursday, 9 a.m. - 4 p.m., except on holidays) or when the City of Takoma Park government offices are closed. Volunteers and residents can contact Karen at lifelong@takomaparkmd.gov or 301-891-7232.

Crossroads call for vendors and volunteers

In preparation for the organization’s 10th anniversary this year, the Crossroads Community Food Network is currently accepting both vendor and volunteer applications for the 2016 market season. There is space for approximately five new vendors (aside from all those returning from last year). The market is especially looking to recruit dairy, free-range eggs/meats, seafood, bread, honey, and plant vendors for its 2016 vendor lineup. If you know of any such producers looking for a new local market, please direct them to the vendor application materials on the Crossroads website, www.crossroadscommunityfoodnetwork.org. The early bird deadline for submitting applications is Feb. 14.

As for volunteers, there are more than 20 different positions available, allowing local students and community members to engage more deeply with Crossroads Farmers Market on Wednesdays and beyond to share their talents in the areas of outreach, nutrition education, media/communications, research, and much more. There’s something for everyone, so take a look at the volunteer position descriptions on the website.

NATURAL TAKOMA

The hidden world of tree roots

By The Takoma Park Tree Commission

Editor’s note: Since Takoma Park’s founding in 1883, residents have valued its sylvan beauty, parks and abundant wildlife. With this issue, the newsletter is inaugurating a new column, Natural Takoma, to be published periodically. It will explore the wide range of the City’s natural treasures and share information and opportunities to celebrate and protect them. Natural Takoma is a collaborative effort involving the Friends of Sligo Creek, Historic Takoma, the Takoma Horticultural Club, the Takoma Park Committee on the Environment and the Takoma Park Tree Commission.

Takoma Park is still in the midst of winter, so it seems appropriate to begin this first column with a closer look at the City’s roots — in this case the critical hidden world of tree roots, where nature is quietly growing in the dark, even in the coldest months of the year.

We are all aware of what we can see of trees: flowers in spring (think of the pink mist you see in maple trees in late February), summer green, fall leaf color and winter bark. But their roots are typically out of sight and out of mind.

Yet roots are essential. Large roots anchor the tree in the ground, while hair-like feeder roots absorb minerals and water from the soil. Tree roots spread far beyond the dripline, up to twice the diameter of the canopy or more. For example, a 40-foot high oak might have a framework of roots 80 feet in diameter. Most roots, especially feeder roots, are near the soil surface where there is oxygen and organic matter. So think of those fragile roots next time you start to walk under a tree and walk around it to avoid compacting the soil.

In the fall, as days grow shorter, our deciduous trees, such as oaks, undergo programmed dormancy. Leaves lose those nutrients into roots, turn color and fall, and buds harden against the winter cold. Roots, however, don’t become dormant; instead they remain quiescent, which means that they slow down but remain ready to start growth at any time if the soil warms up. For example, during last year’s spring-like December in our area, roots grew merrily while other parts of the trees remained dormant.

Keeping these facts in mind, you can protect your trees in the winter months by following these three tips:

1. Create a thin layer, no more than two inches, of partially degraded leaf compost (available from the Department of Public Works) around the drip line and pile a thin layer of wood chips on top, thus reducing compaction.

2. Avoid piling mulch against the bark. Leaf mulch contributes not just nutrients but also mycorrhizal fungi, those nifty little fungi that form in or around roots, enhancing nutrient absorption and repelling tiny underground pests.

3. Avoid shoveling snow from the street onto your roots as the salt mixture can damage or kill them. Consider erecting a silt fence (a low, temporary plastic barrier) along your curb to protect both street and private plantings from salt.

At PhotoPressArt, located at 914 East-West Highway, owner John Kirakosian stocks well-known beers and modestly priced California wine labels, such as YellowTail, Coppola and Jacobs Creek. “Beer is selling better — especially Heineken and Corona,” he said on a recent Friday night, while serving a steady flow of customers, who came in to stock up for the weekend.

For Kirakosian, it’s part of a strategy to offer something for everyone from his compact, bright storefront. Patrons can pick up a snack, LawAzza coffee, and now beer and wine, or use services, such as photo passes and printing.

“This shop has been here since 1982, and I bought it four years ago because it had a good reputation,” he said. “I ask people what they want, and then I try to get it. That’s what I do with my beers.”

Doing what people want is what got the City to this point, said former City Council Member Seth Grimes, who supported changing the alcohol law when he was in office. “The Co-op went all-in on this effort, and I’m glad it did,” Grimes said.

“There are a lot of people who appreciate having a convenient place to get beer and wine.”

Passage of the law in 2014 was not a foregone conclusion. The City Council had considered changing Takoma Park’s alcohol rules in 2010, and a number of citizens testified against it.

Fast forward a few years, and a similar proposal passed the City Council with strong support and little opposition last January. The state legislature heeded the City’s request and changed state law so that Montgomery County alcohol licensing rules would apply in Takoma Park.

The January 2015 City Council resolution included support for Montgomery County Councilmember Hans Riemer’s initiative to curtail the county’s alcohol-distribution monopoly. The Montgomery County Department of Liquor Control (DLC) oversees distribution of all alcohol (beer, wine, hard liquor) and is the only allowed retailer of hard liquor.

Meanwhile, for the shopper seeking liquor to make the perfect martini or mojito, county-owned liquor stores are still the only choices. There’s one exception — TJ Beer Wine and Liquors, which is in Takoma Park, of course.

“TJ’s is the only privately owned liquor store in Montgomery County,” said Takoma Park City Manager Suzanne Ludlow. “It’s on New Hampshire Ave. and was in Prince George’s County, so it was grandfathered when the boundaries for Montgomery and Prince George’s were changed.”

“I think we were the first [body] to call for ending the monopoly,” said Grimes. “There’s resistance in the county because the monopoly is so lucrative, but we’re starting to see movement on it.”

For now, Czech and Kirakosian are learning how to work through DLCs’ hydantoin distribution system. It can be slow, but Czech said the Co-op is able to obtain almost anything that a customer requests and he’s “happy to do special orders.”
